Women in Super and AGSM@UNSW Business School announce annual scholarship program

Women in Super (WIS) and AGSM @ UNSW Business School will announce the continuation of their annual scholarship program at a Women in Super NSW event to be held in Sydney today.

All NSW WIS members are eligible to apply for one of four scholarships that give members the opportunity to attend one of the Australian Graduate School of Management's (AGSM) Executive Education Short Courses to further their learning and leadership capabilities.

Lata McNulty, Chair of NSW WIS said: "Our partnership with AGSM gives our NSW members a wonderful opportunity to pursue their professional and personal development through the scholarship program. Since its introduction, a number of women from our industry have had the opportunity develop their own management skills through this and other programs. With the continuation of the partnership with AGSM announced today, we can now provide the same opportunity to another four talented women."

Ros Wainwright, AGSM Executive Education Head of Corporate Programs said: "AGSM is committed to developing the leadership potential of women in the superannuation industry. These scholarships will enable talented women to pursue executive education across a range of core strategic capabilities to develop strategic leadership and management skills. Now in its fourth year, this initiative in partnership with WIS is an important part of our expanding suite of programs designed to provide access and opportunities for women in leadership."

The AGSM is Australia's leading graduate school of management and amongst the world's elite top 100, according to the Financial Times (UK) 2018 Global MBA Rankings released last month.
